FUND PROSPECTUS AND STATEMENT OF INVESTMENT STRATEGY

A Quick Letter to Our Readers

We started NQH Boring Fund with a simple conviction: that in investing, the surest way to compound wealth over a lifetime is to think like an owner, act like a business-person, and resist the temptation to be interesting. Our name is chosen deliberately. We are not in the business of excitement. We are in the business of being right, slowly, and staying right for a very long time.

Mr. Market badly desires to see people constantly making decisions. He wants people to trade, to predict, to react every single day. We have built our fund on the opposite premise, that patience, temperament, and discipline are the only durable edge available to any investor, and that the rarest skill in our industry is the willingness to do nothing when nothing is the correct action.

Our Philosophy

Everything we do reduces to three disciplines, practiced in sequence and in that order of priority. We say it as a motto because a motto is memorable, but we mean it as an operating discipline that governs every decision we make with our capital.

Seek Insights · Buy Bargain · Do Nothing

Seek Insights

Before we own a business, we work tirelessly to understand it more deeply than the market appears to. This means studying the economics of the industry, the durability of the competitive position, the quality and incentives of management, and the mechanisms by which the business will be worth more in five, seven or even ten years than it is today. An insight, to us, is not a forecast. It is a well-reasoned view about the underlying economic reality of a business that the current price does not yet reflect.

Buy Bargain

We do not pay full price for excellence, and we do not pay any price for mediocrity. Every position we take is purchased with a meaningful discount to our conservative estimate of intrinsic value, what we call the ‘margin of safety’. This discipline protects us twice: it limits the damage when we are wrong, and it amplifies the return when we are right. We would rather hold cash for years than compromise on this principle.

Do Nothing

Once we own a good business at a fair price, our preferred holding period is FOREVER, or as close to forever as circumstances allow. We do not trade around positions, chase momentum, or rebalance for the sake of appearing active. Inactivity, when the underlying facts have not changed, is not laziness, it is the highest expression of conviction. Taxes, transaction costs, and the temptation to tinker are the quiet enemies of long-term compounding, and 'do nothing' is our defense against all three.

Investment Strategy

NQH Boring Fund pursues a concentrated, long-duration equity strategy that blends growth and value disciplines, as we do not think the two are meaningfully separable. A business's value is always a function of the cash it will generate over its lifetime, discounted back to the present. In that framework, growth is simply an input into that calculation, not a separate style. Consequently, a business with stronger long-term growth potential will eventually offer a wider margin of safety particularly when most market players have not yet recognized its potential, leaving its intrinsic value unreflected in the stock price. Our mission is to identify and capitalize on these mispriced opportunities. We are, in that sense, value investors in the fullest and original sense of the term.

What We Look For

- Durable competitive advantages, a business with wide 'MOAT', protected by brand, network effects, switching costs, scale, or regulation, that can be reasonably expected to persist for decades.
- High and sustainable returns on invested capital, with a demonstrated ability to reinvest earnings at attractive rates rather than merely distribute them.
- Honest, capable, and shareholder-aligned management, whom we would be glad to have as partners in a private business.
- A purchase price that offers a substantial margin of safety against our own conservative appraisal of intrinsic value.
- Simplicity, a business we can understand thoroughly, with an economic model that does not require heroic assumptions to justify.

What We Avoid

- Businesses we do not understand, however compelling the narrative.

- 'Leverage, Leverage, Leverage'—important things must be said three times. As Charlie Munger once said, 'smart men broke three ways: liquor, ladies, leverage.' We avoid this at all costs, whether at the fund level or embedded in our portfolio companies, as it could force a sale at the wrong time.
- Turnaround stories, speculative ventures, and situations that depend on a specific favorable outcome to be occurring on a specific timetable.
- Activity for its own sake. We measure ourselves by the quality of our decisions, never by how many decisions we make.

Concentration Over Diversification

We believe wide diversification is a substitute for understanding, not a source of safety. A small number of businesses, deeply understood and purchased at attractive prices, will outperform a large basket of adequately understood businesses over any meaningful period. Our portfolio will typically hold a limited number of core positions, sized in proportion to our conviction and our assessment of downside risk. Concentration cuts both ways, and we accept short-term volatility as the price of long-term outperformance.

Time Horizon: A Permanent Capital Mindset

We think in years, in decades, not months, not even quarters. We, thus, measure our performance the way we measure our own, by the growth in intrinsic value per unit over rolling five- and ten-year periods, not by any single year's return relative to a benchmark. We will, from time to time, underperform a rising market. We consider this an acceptable and even necessary cost of a strategy built to preserve capital in falling markets and compound it relentlessly in all others.

We do not attempt to time markets, predict interest rates, or forecast macroeconomic cycles (all these are non-sense!) to hope that we can buy the dip and sell all at the top, or somehow it would bring us a better returns, we believe no one can predict Mr. Market's next move. Our time is spent almost entirely on the analysis of individual target businesses, because that is the one domain in which patient, careful work reliably produces an edge.

Risk Management

To us, risk is not volatility. Risk is the permanent loss of capital, and it arises from three sources: overpaying for a business, misjudging its competitive durability, or being forced to sell at the wrong time because of leverage or liquidity pressure. We manage risk primarily through price discipline and business selection, not through hedging, derivatives, or frequent trading. We view these three options simply as lotteries with fancier names. They are blunt, costly instruments for a problem better solved by not making the mistake in the first place.

We hold a strategic allocation to cash and cash equivalents at all times, not because we are attempting to time the market, but because dry powder is what allows us to behave rationally, and even opportunistically during bad periods when others are forced to sell.

Fund Governance

The Managing Directors' and the Family's capital are committed to the fund for the long term, with virtually no redemptions (fully invested at all times) to build generational wealth for the Cam Lo family.

Fund Structure Overview

NQH Boring Fund, LLC is organized as a closed, private investment vehicle for the Cam Lo family only. Indicative terms are summarized below.

Investment Objective	Long-term growth of intrinsic value per unit through concentrated ownership of durable, well-managed businesses purchased with a substantial margin of safety.
Strategy & Our Portfolio	Growth-at-value, long-only public and select private equity. But, the fund, in the future, do not refuse to own other assets as well: precious metals, cryptos, or even real estate (co-invest with Società Immobiliare di Cam Lo), etc.
Time Horizon	Multi-decade; capital is expected to remain invested through full market cycles.
Liquidity	Extended lock-up is highly expected with strictly limited periodic redemption windows, aligned to the fund's long holding periods.
Reporting	Only private investment reports and/or internal discussion with the Family's and the fund's leaders.

Closing Statement

We called this the ‘Boring’ fund on purpose. We would rather be boring and right than exciting and wrong. Our aspiration is not to be the most talked-about fund of any given year, but to be, decades from now. We seek insights carefully, we buy bargains patiently, and once we own the right businesses, our proudest action is very often no action at all.

Thanks for your time!

Sincerely,

Managing Directors,
NQH Boring Fund, LLC.
